MARCH SPEAKER: KILLIAN MCRAE

Audio Books: Easier than you think!

by Jenni Everidge

When I worked at a data entry center for the USPS, I would often listen nonstop to audio books. I liked to read while I was at work, but the job prohibited me from taking long enough breaks to read more than a few minutes. Luckily for me, the work was repetitive and lent itself to the audio book beautifully. I read over 250 books that way in two years. Since I left that job (and the State of Indiana), I haven't had much time to read. I no longer have the outlet for audio books that I had, but I do find myself driving for long periods, and during that time, I read. I know I'm not the only one. The audio book market is often seen as a market that has dried out, but I find that oftentimes, I prefer the audio book to the physical copy, especially if the content lends itself to being read aloud.

This month's speaker, Killian McRae, has been consulting with indie writers about marketing their books through the audio platform for the past two years. Killian will focus on an introduction to the audio book platform and the marketing it can provide, and less about the technology that allows for it. She will give you pointers about cost and benefits for presenting your book as an audio book, and she'll compare how different genres handle the process.

Killian McRae lives in the San Francisco Bay Area. She has a degree in Middle Eastern History from the University of Michigan and writes across many genres: science fiction, fantasy, romance, and historical fiction. In addition, she hosts the audio book review podcast, Audific.

April is National Poetry Month

Remember to submit your poem for the WritersTalk Special Poetry Edition, April, 2016. Deadline: March 15.

This month, we're featuring contests from the San Mateo County Fair, Literary Division. Details on Page 13. If you submitted a short story, a memoir, or an essay to WritersTalk in 2015, brush it off and send it to the Fair. The Fair also accepts poetry. Deadline: April 1, 2016.

A third publishing opportunity: Submit a short story, 1000 to 2500 words, in which someone acquires a one dollar bill and then passes it on. We're collaborating on the life story of a dollar bill. Send to prompts@southbaywriters.com with "dollar bill" in the subject line. More prompts online at southbaywriters.com. — WT

RECAP: FEBRUARY, SELF-PUBLISHING PANEL

Bring Your Book into the World

by Karen Sundback

What is sweeter than seeing your name on a book spine, with all the bragging rights and the pride of accomplishment? You've done it! But wait! How do you save your book from instant burial under the avalanche of new books published each year? The U.S. alone publishes a third of a million new titles every year.

Here to help was our own self-publishing panel of experts at the February program: R. L. King, Chess Desalls, and the writing team, Joe King and Mark Gelineau.

Authors King and Gelineau have been releasing one book a month. Unlike books that come out once every few years, our release schedule gives us a bump in sales across all books every month.

R. L. King, an experienced freelance writer, started with four online books (The Alastair Stone Chronicles), but had a similar experience as King and Gelineau. None of hers sold when first launched, four big fat goose eggs. Frustrated, she invested in professionals to edit her books and design new covers. Still, her book sales flatlined. It was not until she introduced her books to social media that her sales turned the corner and soared.

Desalls elaborated on this most essential issue, promoting your books on social media, by using a box with a different word printed on each side: visible, engaging, approachable, generous.

Visible. Desalls attributes her growing following of readers to her participation on social media platforms. She uses every outlet available.

President's Perspective

by Patrick McQueen
President, South Bay Writers

Thank you Sylvia Plath

I have heard a few things about Sylvia Plath. A few details stand out more than others. In particular, she struggled with mental illness throughout her life and she produced amazing poetry. Ultimately, she stuck her head in an oven and let carbon monoxide suffocate her brain. In the thirty years before that, though, she allowed her experiences and her mental illness to fuel perhaps the most influential confessional poetry of the twentieth century. Her legacy continues to inspire others, including my creative writing instructor, Donnelle McGee.

Having just finished McGee's powerful debut novel, Ghost Man, and having recently heard him describe the inspiration he took from Plath's work, I would like to posthumously thank Sylvia Plath for her indirect contribution. I will never know if McGee would have written Ghost Man, or the poems in his published collection, Naked, without her influence. But, if I imagine a world without Plath's work, and that absence results in a world in which we also miss out on McGee's work, I find myself imagining a slightly more disappointing world than this one.

Sometimes you are like McGee. Others inspire you to keep writing, and to get that work out there into the published world. Sometimes, you are like Plath, inspiring people you may never meet, who may not experience your words until after you have moved on from writing in this realm. Your most influential work in the decades to come might not be the work you have published, but the work your kids---or your friends---find in your draft pile and publish in your name. Most of the time, though, you are a combination of both. You are inspiring while being inspired.

Today, I thank Sylvia Plath for inspiring writers like Donnelle McGee. In that, I thank McGee for inspiring my words the way Plath inspired his. I share that thanks with you, in the context of our professional writing club, hoping you will appreciate your value as an inspiration to others. Keep following the words that inspire you. Keep writing the words that brew within you. As presidents before me have said, and presidents after me will say: Sail on, my friends. Sail on. Your words matter more than you may ever know. —WT

And now — the reminder:

Be sure to submit a story about a dollar bill or a vignette from your interesting early life to prompts@southbaywriters.com. Deadline, "dollar bill," March 31, 2016.

Words from the Editor

by Marjorie Bicknell Johnson
Managing Editor

Classic Writing Books 2: The Art of Dramatic Writing

We writers of fiction and nonfiction have thousands of writing guides to choose from, but most of them seem to rehash the same material. Of course, studying a writing guide can help us to improve and hone our craft. Where else can we turn?

I suggest the world of the theater: dramatic writing. People have been writing and producing plays for 3,000 years. While the theater is a highly visual medium, the words on the page are what make or break a play.

In a classic guide for writers, The Art of Dramatic Writing: Its Basis in the Creative Interpretation of Human Motives (1946), Lajos Egri examines a play from the inside out. Egri starts with the heart of any drama: its characters. He says that all good dramatic writing hinges on people and their relationships, which serve to move the story forward and give it life.

The author must have a basic premise—a thesis or central idea demonstrated in terms of human behavior—and develop the dramatic conflict on the basis of that behavior. Egri uses as examples everything from William Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet: "Great love defies even death;" Sidney Kingsley's Dead End: "Poverty encourages crime;" to Henrik Ibsen's A Doll's House: "Inequality of the sexes in marriage breeds unhappiness."

However, neither the premise nor any other part of a play has a separate life of its own; all must blend into a harmonious whole. Egri's book is divided into four main sections: Premise, Character, Conflict, and General.

In the short first section, Egri puts forth the caveat that everything has a purpose or premise; an understanding of that basic kernel of an idea gives substance and structure to the work. In the second section, Egri discusses eleven useful aspects of character development and suggests that a balance needs to exist among character types. In the third section, he begins with the origin of action and concludes with crisis, climax, and resolution. The final section contains useful thoughts on several aspects of writing, including exposition and dialogue.

Egri's four sections cover any story, even fairy tales: Once upon a time, a likeable hero went on an incredible journey where he learned something and grew.

And so, if you are looking for a tool to help your writing craft, by all means consider turning to the theater and the screen. However, whether you start with plot or character or theme, what's really important is to start. You did make such a New Year's resolution, didn't you? —WT

New Members

by Sally A. Milnor

Sally Milnor

I am pleased to introduce our six newest members.

Blair Chen joined us online. She writes short stories.

Penelope Anne Cole, a dual member with our Fremont Branch, writes novels, short stories, poetry, children's books, and memoirs. Penelope has self-published four books, and she has had four books published by GAP Publisher. She plans to republish all of her books in Spanish. In addition to her writing, Penelope tutors first through ninth grade students and reviews children's books. She also rescues dogs and cats. She believes that writers can and do change the world for the better. Penelope's websites are penelopeannecole.com and magicalbookworks.com.

Eboni Harris joined us online, and we were happy to meet her personally when she came to our February meeting. Eboni's novel, The Fourth Piece, will come out this fall.

Lynn Johnson joined our Club at the February meeting. She writes novels, short stories, and nonfiction books. A scientist by training, Lynn currently teaches high school. She says her writing interest is fueled by personal growth. Lynn's email address is CONRAOL@esuhsd.org.

Killian McRae joined us online, and we were pleased to meet her at our February meeting. Killian writes novels, and among her publications are The Vessel; Pure & Sinful; Once You Go Demon; With God Intentions; Snapped; A Love by Any Measure; Compliments; Have Gown, Will Wed; and Hung by the Fireplace.

Mildred Parra joined us online and came to our February meeting. Her primary writing interest is memoir. Her published book, The Town I Live In, is aimed toward teenagers. Mildred's goal is to get her publication into middle and high schools, and many schools have ordered her book.

Franz Spickhoff, like our other new members, joined us online. He came to our February meeting. Franz writes poetry, and his book, You're Eating My Words, is available on Amazon.

Hope to see you at Harry's Hofbrau on March 14! — WT

South Bay Writers Present...

A WRITERS WORKSHOP

The IT Factor

Amplifying Your Voice As A Writer

With Amanda McTigue

SATURDAY, APRIL 16

9:00 AM – Noon

Harry's Hofbrau, 390 Saratoga Ave., San Jose
with Light Continental Breakfast and Lunch

Amanda McTigue

“We hear it everywhere these days, certainly from agents, editors and publishers: what matters most in writing is voice. Voice trumps all other forms of artistry. Indeed, for many readers, it’s the why of reading.

But what the heck is it? And how the heck do we create it?

This hands-on workshop explores techniques for finding your writer’s voice. We’ll consider the “what” and experiment with the “how.” Through conversation and short writing exercises, we’ll investigate ways in which focus begets voice, playing with prompts designed to help you open and amplify that sensibility through which your writing is most powerfully expressed.”

Amanda McTigue’s debut novel Going to Solace was named a Best Read of 2012 by public radio KRCB’s literary program “Word by Word.” Her short story “I Won’t Tell” was anthologized by The Writing Disorder. Last year, the journal Literally Stories cited a new short story “You Don’t Say No to Ituango” as an Editor’s Pick. Amanda’s works for the stage have been produced in Carnegie Hall, the Minnesota Opera and Sonoma County’s Green Music Center. Amanda did her undergraduate work at Yale in the 70s as a member of a small-but-mighty minority, the fourth class of Yalies who also happened to be women. More recently, she’s an alum of both the Squaw Valley and Napa Valley writers’ conferences. Amanda just returned from the remote Sierra Maestra mountains of Cuba where she was researching her next novel, tentatively titled Monkey Bottom. This fall she will return to Sonoma State University to stage Mozart’s opera The Magic Flute.

Desalls has her own blog via WordPress, website, Facebook page, and Tumblr, to name a few. For convenience, many of her accounts are linked so that when she posts on her blog, the post will be shared on her social media feeds. In addition, she advertises on paid promotional sites, where ads can cost from $10 to $100, and submits her titles to Book Club Reading Lists, and online book clubs have chosen to read her books as group reads.

Engaging. Desalls makes her posts as interesting as possible with pictures and rich text.

Approachable. When readers reach out to her, she responds quickly to show her appreciation. It's a simple truth: be nice to your readers and they'll be nice to you, for the most part.

Generous. Desalls, as do the other authors on the panel, gives away books, especially the first book of an installment. These "reader magnets" come with the hope that they bring in paying audience for other books. To prove the point, at the end of the presentation, Desalls gave away several of her books to interested members of the audience.

The panel members can be reached at the following:

Excerpt from interview on January 27, 2016:

Q: What writers made an impression on you?

A: A lot of writers influenced me. I'm a huge fan of George Orwell and his book, 1984. I also love works by Margaret Atwood, Albert Camus, Thomas Hardy, and William Faulkner.

Q: If you could talk to any of your favorites right now, who would it be?

A: This question reminds me of an idea I had, and still have, for a play about an event that happened in 1945. George Orwell waited at a café in Paris to meet Albert Camus, who didn't show up. My idea would be to capture what would have happened had they both shown up.

Q: What does being "independent for your writing" mean to you?

A: I believe in being autonomous when doing my work. In other words, I'm not connected to a certain organization.

CWC NorCal Report

by Jenni Everidge

The NorCal semi-annual meeting was held at Panera Bread on February 6 in Livermore. They discussed many exciting topics, including the February San Francisco Writers Conference and the Bay Area Book Festival, June 4 and 5, Civic Center Park, Berkeley. CWC will be represented at both events, and SBW members interested in volunteering can contact me at vp@southbaywriters.com.

They announced another Building Better Branches conference, tentatively scheduled for October 8. The conference, open to any CWC member in the NorCal area, will focus on improving leadership within our branches by sharing tactics with other branch members. Please stay tuned for more information on this conference. If you are interested in attending, especially if you are considering a leadership or volunteer role in the South Bay Writers, please contact me at the above email address. —WT

CWC Central Board

by Patrick McQueen

Central Board Semi-Annual Meeting:

Twice each year, in July and January, all central board representatives and the executive committee of the statewide California Writers Club gather in Oakland for the daylong face-to-face board meeting. The most recent meeting was held January 31, 2016. This meeting consisted of reports and updates from board members, most of which had been discussed on the e-business forums, where central board representatives discuss and vote between these meetings.

As of January 31, CWC had 1877 members statewide. CWC is operating under budget this fiscal year.

Bob Isbill has been appointed Advertising Director for CWC. Go to calwriters.org to learn how to submit advertising for The CWC Bulletin.

SBW Club Status for CWC's Bulletin

by Linda M. Judd

South Bay Writers is growing! Word of mouth has been a huge source for new membership as our members encourage friends to join. The branch continues to offer excellent monthly speakers and workshops in the South Bay. We hosted author Michael Bracken's Short Story Workshop in November and are preparing for another workshop in April. Also in November, SBW teamed up with a local chapter of NaNoWriMo to host a write-in during our monthly dinner meeting. We're also creating writing opportunities with multiple prompts on our website with the idea of publishing submissions in an anthology.

SBW has been successfully networking with the public through Goodreads.com and MeetUp.com to encourage participation in the club's dinner meetings, Open-Mic nights, and the discussion groups TalkShop and TalkBooks. Several of our members compete and win at the San Mateo County Fair, the only fair that hosts writing competitions. Our efforts to encourage participation and make our programs accessible also included awarding a student scholarship to our most recent workshop.

TalkShop is a potluck meeting providing a platform to discuss the art of writing. It is a forum where you may vent your writing frustrations, analyze challenges, and learn ways to improve.

TalkBooks is a book club in which we read books written by members of our branch. Featured SBW Authors, introduced on Goodreads, are interviewed in person at the Santa Clara public library each month.

Our new Publicity & PR Chair, Linda Myro Judd, is enthusiastic about educating members on using Social Media and developing online presence. Most of our 20 new members joined online, modeling how important online presence is to our success as individual writers and as an organization. Linda can be reached at sbw.publicity@gmail.com. —WT

All SBW members should have received The CWC Bulletin as a link in an email from Linda Judd. Be sure to click on that link. The Bulletin has timely info and the new technology is awesome.

Blog Posts: SBW Tweets and Free Publicity

by Linda Judd

Thank you everybody for the warm welcome that you gave me at Monday's dinner meeting. For those of you who managed to get to the meeting around 6 pm, my hat's off to you: you deserve a big applause, [Blinking APPLAUSE Sign]. As the new Publicity Chair, I'm still negotiating traffic on San Tomas and coordinating my clock. As my first order of fun, I signed the club up on Twitter so we can Tweet into the 21st century.

Copy this: www.twitter.com/southbaywriters. With this address you can "visit" our twitter page right away. If you go to www.twitter.com and do a search on SouthBay-Writers, one word, you'll also find the club's page.

For you more experienced Tweepers, please be there for our brave new Tweepers. Now that folks are getting on board, it's important to "Follow" each other on Twitter. Then a tweet, a message, has somebody to go to.

It's important, that I, as the club's person behind @SouthBayWriters, follow back those who follow @SouthBayWriters, within reason.

In the menubar above the header image, Twitter gives a "Notification" when a twitter user starts "following" the club, "likes" a club tweet, "retweets" a club tweet or "mentions" the club in a tweet. The app also sends me a complimentary email about these notifications, which is a choice by the user to receive or not. Some twitter users allow Messages to be sent from their Twitter page.

We have club members who have hundreds of followers, and some who have thousands of followers, and some, like our club, who have smaller numbers like, 28 Tweets, 37 Following, 24 Followers, and 22 Likes, as seen in the photo below the header image.

The Reach of One Tweet:

Okay, let's say, that you and the club are following each other. When you send out a Tweet, the club will see your Tweet. I, as the club's person, can click the ReTweet button on your Tweet, and your message will be broadcasted to all the club's followers. Twitter is a free avenue for publicity.

If a tweet goes from user to users who have small numbers of followers, then the tweets are not going to have a far reach. If the people you are following have large numbers of followers, then your tweets are going to have a far reach. As a home base, the club needs to build its reach by having followers with a large reach. So it's important for members of CWC and SBW to support each other by following each other on Twitter.

Share our new Twitter handle, @SouthBayWriters, with writers who are in the mode to increase their audience, their reach, their free publicity. — WT

Year of the Monkey

by Valerie Lee

Gung Hay Fat Choy!

Did you know that America was born in the Year of the Fire Monkey? Is it a coincidence that this mighty country seems to bear the same traits as the energetic, gesticulating Monkey—that of being a natural leader and innovator? Self-assurance, determination, aggressiveness, power and the ability to keep one step ahead of the game is what America is all about. Although competitive on the world scene, America is like the Fire Monkey. With great vitality, perseverance and constant drive, America will continue to remain on top.

Of all the animals in the Chinese lunar calendar, the Monkey resembles the Naked Ape, man, himself. The Monkey inherits man's intellect as well as his capacity for deceit. Those born in the Monkey Years: 1920, 1932, 1944, 1956, 1968, 1980, 1992 and 2004, are charmers with a natural flair for fun and mischief. Although friendly and congenial and noted for their intelligence, talents, and flexibility, they're practical decision makers with good common sense. Originality and creativity are their most prized traits.

Although Monkey people are lucky in business, they're not lucky in love. Sometimes they appear egotistical and selfish and can even be dishonest. However, since they're likeable characters, many people overlook their flaws. Once the Monkey gets what he wants, he loses interest. Because of his complicated and suspicious nature, he doesn't have many lasting relationships, but the Monkey is a survivor and always comes up a winner.

The Monkey is the ninth animal in the Chinese lunar calendar. His reign began on February 8, 2016, and ends on January 27, 2017. Chinese New Year or spring festival has been celebrated for over 3,000 years and is known as Guo Nian in Chinese, or "avoiding the mysterious being."

In 2016 prepare yourself for an exciting year. The Monkey will bring out our desires to succeed in the game of chance. We'll find ourselves speculating, gambling, and exploiting risky but ingenious options. The Monkey will put an end to the recession, and business will skyrocket. This year's motto will be, "Don't give up. No is not the answer." — WT

Pawn in the Portal: A Novella

by Madeline McEwen

Madeline McEwen wants to raise awareness about tech users vulnerability – particularly children. Pawn in the Portal highlights the exponential growth of cybercrime lurking in our technology-driven, “cloud-based” world. The number of susceptible victims is expanding rapidly with just the click of a mouse. According to RSA Research from April 2015, cyber attacks have increased 11% year-on-year. This past September, INTERPOL and the FBI started working even closer together to fight terrorism and cybercrime. Proceeds from McEwen’s absorbing new mystery will benefit the Terre Des Hommes Charitable Foundation, which supports exploited children throughout the world.

McEwen’s novella focuses on Henry Winestock’s suspicious suicide in the seaside town of Poole on the south coast of England; thousands of child sexual predators are exposed. The lead detective in the case, Corinne Prendergast, is bedridden by flu and can’t actively be involved with the investigation while her journalist partner, a friend of the grieving family, struggles to uncover the truth.

Henry’s credit card records show the history of his access to the Terre Des Hommes’ online interactive pornographic website. Did Henry unwittingly visit the site? Was he an addict or an innocent pawn in the portal? (Release date: February 2016)

Sammi the Seahorse

by Judith Shernock

Sammi the Seahorse is a children’s book, written by Judith Shernock and illustrated by her husband, Donald Shernock. Carla Davala, on U. S. Review of Books, says: “The clever charm of this tale comes forth in Judith Shernock’s ability to disguise typically dry scientific jargon. Here she gently weaves the narrative with smart factoids about lifelong mating habits, and the unusual incubation process that takes place in the seahorse realm. Creative illustrations make use of snapshot-style seascape backgrounds.” www.theusreview.com/reviews/Sammi-The-Seahorse-by-Judith-Shernock.html#.VsNZDeaguO0

Serialize Your Book

by Betty Auchard

A few years ago I submitted a story to the free magazine, Today’s Senior. The editor wrote back, “I like this, but can you shorten it to 750 words?”

“Yes, sure...no problem.” I lied. Killing a hundred words was like cutting off a toe. I don’t remember how I managed, but I returned the story with 752 words that she accepted and put into the November 2008 issue. Now, it’s 2016, and my stories have appeared on that same page every month since then. Do I get paid? No, but I get lots of email from friends saying they’ve read something by me in Today’s Senior. Does it sell more books? I don’t think so, but it’s fun seeing my work published.

Aside from being fun, I’ve learned something from this experience: how to tighten my writing. At first it was painful to delete my precious sentences. Now it’s easier and almost fun.

What do I submit? A whole book – one story each month. My first book, Dancing in My Nightgown, took about four years to

March Terse on Verse

by Pat Bustamante

March Archery

Recall how history names the bow and arrow
Our first weapon of war: off the straight and narrow
It is to be hoped that PEACE is achieved
All over this world, every dispute settled, relieved Without maiming or murdering; our Mars
Being far from a war-god, just a light among stars.
Children can play with bow and arrows for fun
Let's hope "War's A Great Thing" is over and done.

— Pat Bustamante

March is a way of movement, a month, sometimes a description of a parade! Do you march to a drumbeat of creative writing ideas? Shoot as high as you can for your creating target.

Take away the 'M' of March: words are to play with sometimes, a bonus to our hard work on poems, stories, novels, memoirs, on and on. ARCH? Could be a bridge or a monument; could be a flirting attitude, something cute or maybe a part of your foot.

Then there's the Ark, or an arc like a rainbow; Arcadia sneaks in that arc.

Languages are made for more than communicating. Our English language has a huge amount of play possible. Puns are good exercises for getting creativity warmed up and ready to go. "Have fun, pun, run." The life of a creative word artist should include lots of joy and laughter. Go for the game! Good luck to you. — WT

You Are

You seemed untouchable
There was a protective air about you
Perspectives never imagined came to light
Pieces of you unfolded
Giving insight to inner truths
Knowing some of your secrets
Hidden for so long
Opened a whole new world
You are in memories
Of yesterdays gone by
As the sun sets
You rise
To talk of storytellers
Near and Far
Footprints Left
Space Explored
Now A Full Moon
You Are

My Savior, Sir Comic

A sense of humor is just common sense, dancing. — William James

When I'm feeling down
Sorrow puddled at my feet
Misery my queenly crown
Despair my royal seat.

Sir Comic will arrive
Twist my mood around
Make me feel alive
Giggles come unbound.
Blackness turns to rainbow
Twinkles replace tears
Nonsense puts on a show
And chases off my fears.

Regal yet a clown
Robes of rainbow hue
He can erase my frown
Make me want to coo.
He'll visit if you let him
Remove your evil sprites.
When he sings a comic hymn
Darkness turns to light.

The Tugboat

The rusted and tired tugboat left alone and all forlorn in the backwaters of the great bay
along the shore in the now almost forgotten town
The hull the pilothouse the bridge
red, white and blue
a sign in the window
So tempting to one who would disobey
just to see what it was all about Warning
No Trespassing
Keep Out

The engine quiet
the line coiled in a casual heap her smokestack pointing upward as if to speak

The sun-drenched marsh
caressing the boat
as if wrapping her in a cloak of warm late afternoon glow

No one around and not a sound
only her spirit
moaning and moving in search of the line
coiled on the shore

If not moored she might float away
but where would she go?

Where she rests now is the only home she knows in the water
along the shore of that now forlorn almost forgotten town

Bad Language

by Jac Fitz-enz, Leading Edge, March 2016

I am appalled at the deterioration of the written and spoken word in America. I'm not even referring to Twitter, a patois invented for the truly demented.

It seems to me that apparently the teaching of the English language came to a close coincidentally with the cessation of World War II. No matter which medium I peruse, from newspapers to magazines, books, radio, television or email, I find instances of egregious spelling and grammar that would jar the teeth of a tenth grader. If you believe I exaggerate, read the newspaper. Journalists whose profession is founded on words often put together convoluted sentences that require two or three passes to decipher their intended message. Look at today's paper. I'll bet you can find a sentence similar to the one that occurred in our local newspaper yesterday, "Last night a man was shot in Los Altos." Where in his body is his los altos? Peter Drucker got it right: "Journalists call people gurus because they can't spell charlatans."

My intention is not to be a snob, but rather to elicit attention and action. Our children already have the burden of squinting at truncated electronic drivel. We owe it to them to provide examples of how their native language should be delivered.

Let me offer a few cases. First, try the word forte. It has two meanings and three possible pronunciations. Here's something easier for those who flunked recess. Do you know when to use farther or further? Ford has a commercial that says, "Go further with Ford?" I don't know what that means. I might have said "farther", but then I don't know their intention. How about complimentary and complementary? Is a complement complimentary or is a compliment complementary? Then there is redundancy: close proximity; continue on; and past experience. Possibly the worst abomination is the use of get. Rid "get my meaning" and replace it with understand.

Finally, there are just too many cases wherein someone uses the wrong word or words out of context in a sentence that is exceedingly and unnecessarily long without bothering to consider the benefit of punctuation. In this case KISS means keep it short, simpleton.

The other side of the communications issue is speaking, using the right words in a persuasive manner to win people to your views. Public speaking is number one on many people's list of great fears. Over the course of my career I've spoken to over 90,000 people in 46 countries. In the beginning I too was fearful of my ability and the audience's receptivity to my message. I learned that most people wanted me to be successful. I just needed to improve my speaking skills. The principles of effective speech are simple: credibility, logic and emotion. We can thank Aristotle for this. He called them ethos, logos, and pathos.

When I started I had no credibility so I relied on logic. That was a mistake. I forgot about emotion. Over time I learned that the best way to move an audience is to start with a story to which they can relate (not relate to). By using shared experiences in human resources, good and bad, I built credibility. They accepted that I was one of them. Then I could turn to data, logic, to drive home the evidence behind my argument.

Someone said that stories are just data with a soul. I started my first novel, Rough Waters, with a story of what happened to a seven-year-old boy on his last day of school in second grade. Everyone has painful episodes from their school years and so can relate to this little boy's trauma. The reader will read on to learn how the boy coped and how that affected his life. Aren't you curious, too?

This reliance on emotion is why I often share my experience in human resources management when writing this column. I need to connect emotionally before I can apply the logic underpinning my position.

Whether you liked him or not, you have to admit that Ronald Reagan had a successful political career. Starting as president of the Screen Actors Guild, he was elected governor of California and finally, president of the United States. In every case he won two terms. The secret to his success was his ability to communicate, through stories and emotional rhetoric: "Mr. Gorbachev, tear down that wall." On the other side: Dan Quayle or Bush II.

I've learned you have to entertain as well as educate. Using the right word in the right context delivered with conviction and passion is the pathway to success. —WT

San Mateo County Fair, Literary Arts Division: June 11 – 18 Literary Submissions Deadline April 1

by Carolyn Donnell

It's that time again. The wonderful Literary Arts Division of the San Mateo County Fair is ramping up for 2016. The CWC San Francisco/Peninsula branch has been presenting free workshops and readings on the fair's literary stage since 2009 and conducting contests, and publishing entries in Carry the Light (Vols I – IV to date). This year there are 11 divisions including fiction, memoir, essays, poetry, children's books and new divisions for songwriting and digital/audio entries. If you count the sub-divisions, including some with under age 55 and over 55 divisions, you have up to 30 different categories. More opportunities to win a prize. Many divisions also have a lottery option to win a professional critique of your entry.

New for 2016: Every winner of a first, second, third, or honorable mention award will be published in the Anthology, except digital media submissions, which will be posted on the literary web page. In addition, San Mateo County Fair will publish online each entrant's submission regardless of a win and will include an optional bio (75 words or less), plus website and/or blog links on the new, permanently archived web publication.

Deadline for all Literary Entries is 11:59 pm on Friday, April 1, 2016. This includes your bio and web-links as mentioned above, if you want to be in the online publication.

Go to <http://www.sanmateocountyfair.com/contests/departments/literary-arts> (Scroll down and you will see some happy South Bay Writers Club faces from last year's fair.) Download the Contest Book Information ASAP. Read this VERY! Carefully! before entering. It is a long and detailed document.

When you are ready to enter, click on Online Entry Form. $10 per entry. Yes, they charge $10 per entry! But you have a good chance to win $100, $50, or $25 AND you receive tickets for fair entry and for parking — that's $10 back, right there. If you have difficulties, email literary@smeventcenter.com BEFORE the April 1st entry deadline.

Some highlights this year:

Saturday, June 11, 1 – 6 pm: Carry the Light Anthology Launch and Book Signing

Sunday, June 12, 1 – 6 pm: Annual Writers Mini-Conference

Monday, June 13, 2 – 4 pm: Kid's Day: "Create Your Own Space Alien"

Tuesday, June 14, 12 – 8 pm: Senior Day workshops; Fault Zone readings

Saturday, June 18, 2 – 4 pm: Author Day. Local authors sell and sign books

Watch website for additional writers' events.

You need not win a prize or buy a book to attend any of the free literary workshops and events — all free with fair entry. It's a mini-writers conference, and sometimes editors and agents attend.

Come and meet your fellow writers! — WT

SBW TalkBooks Talks SBW Books

SBW TalkBooks is a book club that selects books written by SBW members for its monthly group reads. TalkBooks has a presence on Goodreads where members can discuss books online. Goodreads offers networking opportunities through blogs and social media. Many authors have blogs in need of something to talk about; TalkBooks will help get that conversation going. Sharing book news leads to book buzz among readers whom an author might never reach alone. TalkBooks meets at 7:30 PM on the last Wednesday of each month at the Santa Clara Library on Homestead in Santa Clara. For info, contact Linda Judd at lindyjudd@yahoo.com.

If you are a member of South Bay Writers who has a published book, send a jpg of the cover and a descriptive paragraph to newsletter@southbaywriters.com. We will publish your book announcement. Also, be sure to join the SBW group on Goodreads and ask to be interviewed by SBW TalkBooks. It's easy: establish your Goodreads account and then join our group; the administrator lets you in. — WT
