MAY SPEAKER ALEJANDRO ADAMS

Screenwriting and Video Production

by Kelly Gomez

Alejandro Adams, professor of media studies at San Jose State University, knows how to write for motion picture films. For a number of years, he has been involved in Cinequest San Jose, where he has been interviewed as the director of his screenplays. His films include Around the Bay, Canary, and Babnik.

Alejandro Adams

Adams began his career in fiction writing, but discovered a larger market for screenwriting and video production. Since then he has focused primarily on screenwriting and teaching. He teaches university level classes on film history, business, and screenwriting technique. At the May South Bay Writers general meeting, he will discuss how to write for film and how to publish screenplays.

Whatever you write — novels, memoir, poetry — screenwriting and motion pictures have much to say to you. Many movies begin with a scene that shows the setting. Then the picture zooms into an action leading into the story. Sometimes you are introduced to the main character and a problem he needs to resolve.

Your piece must have a setting, and you must picture your scene and what your characters are doing in order to write about them. Think about how the scene is set with its rich visual and auditory elements and visualize your zoom-in. Now you have the beginning of your chapter. Your other chapters follow suit if you pretend you are watching a movie as you write them.

Come to hear Alejandro Adams and think about how you can profit from learning about screenwriting technique.

Many of us have heard of J. R. R. Tolkien, J. K. Rowling, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Stephen King, and William Shakespeare. Those great writers have one thing in common: their books have been made into motion feature films.

If we were to ask those novelists whether they believed their newly published books would soon become a major motion picture, initially, most would say no.

At some point, however, those successful writers had published something so meaningful that turning it into a movie became the next most logical step.

As a writer, how many times have you thought of the possibility of turning your novel into a major motion picture? What would it take to transform your writing?

If the idea of taking your story to the next level to win an award at the next Cinequest Film Festival sounds exciting to you, please come to our next meeting at Harry's Hofbrau at 6 pm on May 8. — WT

RECAP APRIL SPEAKER DANNI BURTON

What Compels Us to Keep Reading or Listening?

by Karen Sundback

Ever find a book that you can't put down? What is it about certain stories that grab us?

At our April meeting, Danni Burton offered some tricks of the storytelling trade. She is a preservationist — preserving the wisdom and wit of everyday people through stories. All very well, but how does she guide her storytellers to weave a tale so compelling that we can't turn away?

She stressed the importance of an engaging opening. A paragraph that grabs your reader will keep him/her reading. Burton offered four approaches. Here we found examples used with literature's great opening paragraphs:

- Intrigue. From A Tale of Two Cities: "It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness..."
- Sense of purpose. From On The Road: "...Before that I'd often dreamed of going West to see the country, always vaguely planning and never taking off."
- Heroism. From Moby Dick: "... With a philosophical flourish Cato throws himself upon his sword; I quietly take to the ship."
- Provocative. From American Tabloid: "America was never innocent. We popped our cherry on the boat over and looked back with no regrets."

Hidden Figures

"Look beyond the numbers. Around them. Through them."
— from the movie Hidden Figures

"Look beyond the numbers. Around them. Through them." Al Harrison, the character based on Robert C. Gilruth, head of the Space Task Group at Langley in the 1960s, advises in the Oscar nominated screen play written by Allison Schroeder. The script is based on the book Hidden Figures by Margot Lee Shetterly. For those who haven't seen the movie, it's about the untold story of mathematician Katherine Globe (married name Johnson) the only "computer" and black woman allowed to work in the control room of the Friendship 7's mission in 1962 Virginia. The movie includes her critical contributions to the launch and recovery, in addition to the supporting experiences of her friends and an entire department of "computers" as they overcame the challenges of adversities experienced living in the segregated south, gender biases within NASA, and the pressures of the space race itself.

In 2015 President Obama presented the Presidential Medal of Freedom to Katherine for her lifelong achievements.

But how much really happened? Did John Glenn really ask for "the girl" (Katherine) to verify the IBM mainframe's calculations before he got on board? How much of the book and the screenplay are true? Schroeder said, "Adjustments to fit the truth into a narrative structure" were made. She "shifted the timeline around ... to add dramatic stakes in some places ... Nothing went that far astray, though ... Those title cards at the end are true. We are always building towards them."

Yes, the story was true, with the exception that it took Katherine 1.5 days to do the calculations and not a few minutes as the movie showed. And yes, her calculations matched the mainframe exactly to the last digit. The rest is history.

Next month the last Pres 2cents (June 2017) will give a synopsis of the SBW "Hidden Figures" for 2016 - 2017. "Math is always dependable," Katherine would say when her environment was the most demanding. I think this approach is a rational way to gain a perspective on the SBW year in review.

In the meantime, June is our election month and we have a full slate of excellent candidates! But that doesn't mean an attending member can't still nominate from the floor "any time preceding the election with consent of the candidate" as our Bylaws (approved June 2010) allow. (Refer to Article IV: Elections). — WT

Plot Potholes and Pitfalls

Many members of South Bay Writers list novels or short stories as their main writing interest. This column is devoted to identifying some problems you may have with your plot or story line.

You have finished the great American novel, the most memorable memoir, or the winning short story, but something's wrong: it just doesn't pop. Maybe you have dropped into a plot pitfall. Here are six traps for you to avoid.

It's a predictable or a familiar plot. If your readers know what's going to happen, maybe you have some overused plot points. Are you telling your own story or retelling someone else's?

It's all action. If your protagonist never has any time to think and reflect, you're writing an account of a marathon race, not an interesting story. Great books have pace and rhythm.

It's too shallow. Do your words evoke emotion, or do you create beautiful prose and perfectly formed sentences? Readers would rather read a fantastic story written in plain prose.

It's illogical. Do your events follow a logical time sequence? Make sure the timeline has an inner logic that flows through the whole book. Make an outline, one sentence for each chapter; are the events in the right order? Does your character put on his shoes before his socks? Do you hop from 1999 to 2003 and then back to 1997? Are your transitions smooth?

It's too farfetched. Do you stretch your readers' suspension of disbelief too far? In science fiction, you can go a long way without readers calling you out on the details, but you will hear about it if you get the science wrong. When Andy Weir first published The Martian, he had to rewrite the story based upon readers' input on the science. However, you can be too farfetched without writing sci-fi. Would attorneys really act like that in court? Could a cop really take the law into his own hands without consequences? Would a single mother truly take on that much responsibility or that many risks? Sure, it's fiction, but above all, it has to be believable.

It's too complicated. Do you have too many characters or too many subplots? Can you describe your storyline in one or two sentences?

If you can add to this list of common plot or story pitfalls or suggest how to climb out of such traps, please share your wisdom with us in an article for WritersTalk. —WT

New Members

by Sally A. Milnor

Sally Milnor
Contributing Editor

I am happy to introduce two new members.

George Catano joined us online and attended our April meeting. George's primary area of interest is in writing science fiction novels. On his membership questionnaire, George said, "I am constantly amazed by the mystery of life. What is it? Where did it come from? Is there a purpose to it? Science explains much, but I feel there is much more that we don't know about. Still hidden from view are great mysteries, and that inspires my stories." He also said, "I work in marketing but took a year off to focus on writing. I think of it as an apprenticeship to a future career in writing."

Doug Fortier is a dual member with CWC's Mendocino Coast Branch, and he writes fiction. On his membership questionnaire, Doug said that his interest in writing is fueled by the creative process, to write and revise an engaging story that the reader wants to finish. His work has appeared in NOYO River Review, 2014, p. 84, short story, "Today"; CWC Mendocino Coast UP-DWELLING Anthology, 2014, "Shoe Shine Magic"; and CWC Mendocino Coast MENDOCINO Anthology, 2017, "Voodoo Taboo." Doug's web page is dougfortier.com.

To Our New Members: We wish you a warm welcome and hope your membership brings you inspiration and enjoyment. To all of our South Bay Writers: We appreciate and need your continuing presence and support. Thank you, again, for helping to keep our Club flourishing.

See you at our next meeting on May 8th. — WT

It's Time to Renew

Due to the quirks of the California Writers Club fiscal year, your membership in South Bay Writers expires on June 30, 2017. That means that, every current member of South Bay Writers needs to renew for 2017-18. Yes, even if you have a half-year membership because you joined in January or February or March or April.

To renew for 2017-2018, please pay $45 by check written to South Bay Writers at the SBW meeting May 8 or pay $45 online at southbaywriters.com. Do it now so you won't forget and so you won't be annoyed by repeated notices to renew.

To sweeten the pot, a special prize will be awarded to a lucky SBW member who has renewed by 7 pm, May 8. — WT

TalkBooks Interviews

Judith Shernock:

Sammi the Seahorse

by Inga Silva

Story of a Seahorse

After a visit to the Monterey Aquarium featuring seahorses, writer Judith Shernock became so enthralled by the exhibit that she decided to write a children's book about these fascinating creatures.

Shernock researched these seahorses and learned more about the particulars of the way they live in the ocean life, which she shared at the last Talkbooks presentation. There are 39 to 40 varieties of seahorses, and they are sometimes called the pipehorse. Seahorses like to rap their tales around things so they don't get blown away, which puts them at risk when fishing vessels put down their nets, especially in the China Sea. There are also many interesting historical facts about seahorses; for example, in the 1600s in China, seahorses were used to make medicine to treat such ailments as asthma, whooping cough, high cholesterol, and even impotence. In addition, Shernock also researched the octopus and continues to learn about different sea creatures.

The pictures beautifully illustrate the seahorses. Pictures of the characters are superimposed on real photos taken in the ocean, revealing pictures of the sea characters that children will enjoy both seeing and reading about. These delightful characters would catch any child's eye: Sammi a male seahorse, Yammi a female seahorse, Piper the pipefish, Dawdy & Lolly who are the offspring of Sammi and Yammi, and last but not least, Sir Wonderpus, an octopus. Without giving away the content, the story reveals one of the most interesting facts about male and female seahorses.

Judith Shernock is also an accomplished psychotherapist who has worked mainly with children. She received the first-place award from the Pacific Book Awards for Best Children's Book for ages 1 - 5 in 2016 and also received a positive review by United States Review of Books for this work. — WT

About the Author:

After viewing the seahorses at the Monterey Bay Aquarium, Judith Shernock was inspired to write the story of Sammi and Yammi, hoping that this book would move children to explore the fascinating world under the sea. Her husband Don added charming artwork that greatly enhanced the story.

Judith was born and grew up in Brooklyn, New York, and she lived in Israel for twenty years. Her career as a psychotherapist began in Israel and continued in San Jose where she worked for the Bureau of Drugs and Alcohol of Santa Clara County for many years and in private practice. She has contributed numerous articles, stories, and poems to California Writers Club newsletters and many other publications. — WT

Seahorses in Love

Recap: Danni Burton

A good opening can pull in an audience, but how do you keep them?

Burton suggests surprise, humor, and keeping things light. She offered this philosophy from one of her collaborators: There are four kinds of males — those that believe in Santa Claus; those that don't; those that dress as Santa; and finally those that look like Santa.

Burton's latest project is conserving the stories of "vintage" storytellers. One audience member thought that our elders are the forgotten voices of our society and lauded her efforts to collect these stories before they are gone.

Colorful Journeys of Success: Deeper Colors with Carolyn Donnell

by Carolyn Donnell

Last October, Clare Mullin, producer of the Colorful Journeys of Success series hosted an interview with me as the guest. An hour-long interview included many questions (many!) not only about myself and my writings and life, but also about organizations in the area that help writers and various possibilities for publication and contests, etc.

My books are Deeper Colors and Blood Will Tell, and Clare billed me as an author, an artist, a poet, a musician, and a writers' supporter.

The interviewee (me) was very nervous, but Clare helped me keep on track, and I ended up sounding like I actually knew something. This program was aired on KMVT15 Community Media on March 8, 2017. See at <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Yj8qjLXSRJw>

Roamer's World

by Penelope Anne Cole

L'Iam breathed deeply and surveyed the rapidly changing view from his captain's chair. Or his engineer seat, since Roamer was more like a train than anything else. I wonder where we'll end up today. L'Iam seldom gave orders to Roamer — preferring the titillation of a surprise destination. It didn't matter to him, or his on-board women and progeny, where they ended up. Everywhere they went there'd be family.

From his vantage point, L'Iam watched as Roamer roared through forests, down valleys, across deserts — diving under lakes and rivers. It didn't go under the sea — too deep even for something so massive. The sea surrounded and circumscribed their world.

It's been awhile since we've visited La Forêt de la Mer — and Liliana. L'Iam closed his deep set blue eyes and luxuriated in the mental image of Liliana, a pale forest maiden. Together they'd wandered by the sea. She should have had her twins by now.

He didn't know or care how much time had passed. Time was irrelevant to him, to this life. He pictured Liliana's dark haired babes playing in the sand.

"Yes, it would be good to see Liliana of the Sea," he announced to the empty cab.

In this world, travel was entrusted to Roamer, an invention that spanned generations. No one knew when in the past it had been created. It was virtually indestructible with an ever growing human-like intelligence. It ran on solar and kinetic energy. Roamer knew every overland and underground route. Perhaps there were vestiges of roads, tracks, tunnels, or GPS coordinates that it followed. Who knew or cared as long as it functioned. It was a means of transport, a way of connecting L'Iam with each human community — each settlement he had sired and nurtured. Indeed, without L'Iam and Roamer there would be basically no civilization to speak of.

Nearing nightfall, Roamer slowed and stopped by a sea, glimmering in the setting sun. Did it read my thoughts? Did it know my desires? Such questions briefly popped into L'Iam's head but were overtaken by the business at hand — disembarking and reuniting with their people. Already the children were milling about calling for their sisters, who shyly emerged from the forest.

The women shepherded the children through the darkening woods to the meadow where evening fires had been set and food preparations begun.

Once the travelers were assembled, tasks were given out. Then L'Iam hunted Liliana in earnest. She was at the far end of the encampment.

Even from a distance, he could see the two infants nursing, first one and then the other, as was their custom. Liliana did not look up, though most certainly she had heard their boisterous arrival. Roamer was soundless on a long smooth stretch, but starts and stops generally required loud bursts of energy — not a quiet arrival.

L'Iam knelt at Liliana's side and picked up the larger of the two babes.

Liliana met his questioning gaze with a slight shake of her head. Then her attention returned to the task of feeding these two — girls, yet again — only girls. — WT

Sad Waters

Water we drink
In water we sink
Blood turns to pink
In water

By sea water we met
Our bodies so wet
A clever dare set Deep water

Steep rocks we found
Our dives made no sound
Death spun you around Raging water

Our souls lament
This elegiac event
Thus, life is spent Silent water

Inspiration from Pearl S. Buck

by Jamal Khan

Below is an inspiring quote for your consideration.

Pearl S. Buck, (1892-1973), recipient of the Pulitzer Prize in 1932 and of the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1938, once said, "The truly creative mind in any field is no more than this: A human creature born abnormally, inhumanly sensitive.

To him...

a touch is a blow,
a sound is a noise,
a misfortune is a tragedy,
a joy is an ecstasy,
a friend is a lover,
a lover is a god,
and failure is death.

Add to this cruelly delicate organism the overpowering necessity to create, create, create — so that without the creating of music or poetry or books or buildings or something of meaning, his very breath is cut off from him. He must create, must pour out creation. By some strange, unknown, inward urgency he is not really alive unless he is creating." — WT

"To find joy in work is to discover the fountain of youth."

— Pearl S. Buck

Not Today

write a poem today
that's the challenge, they say

I have excuses galore
let me think of some more start with late rising no lack of surmising

the house is a mess
when I'll clean is a guess

have plenty of time to think of more rhymes

will I ever succeed
I guess I just need inspiration to come but now I have none
not today.

— Carolyn Donnell

Water, water everywhere – and not a drop to drink next year!

by ArLyne Diamond, Ph.D.

Why after all these years does California still think its Camelot and that it only rains a few hours in the middle of the night – each night?

*The rain may never fall till after sundown
By eight, the morning fog must disappear
In short, there's simply not a more congenial spot
For happy-ever-after-ing than here in Camelot*

I've been living here since the sixties and note that some years it rains a lot and others not enough. You'd think the legislature would figure this out themselves.

You'd think money would be allocated for more dams and reservoirs, which would save the over-flow of water in the flood years.

Instead, we allow it to flood. We allow huge losses of water as well as huge losses of property. We even allow people to be injured because of over-flows.

What are we thinking?

We probably are spending far more money on repairs and reimbursements for damage instead of being pro-active and creating what we need to collect and use the water in the drier years.

When I chaired the Infrastructure Committee for the San Jose-Silicon Valley Chamber of Commerce, I learned that people only wanted to pay taxes to support what they thought were new and sexy projects.

So, it was OK to spend millions of dollars on the Light Rail – which wasn't what we needed – instead of repairing roads, bridges, dams and reservoirs.

How come we are spending millions of dollars on bike lanes before we fix the potholes and increase the ride ability on our highways? Sure, it would be lovely to have bike lanes, but what are our priorities? Do we do the new and sexy and ignore what really needs to be accomplished?

Over and over again we complain about the lack of water, the potholes and other infrastructure damage – but we refuse to pay taxes to make all these repairs. Why is that?

Do you do that at home too? Do you buy new clothes and stuff instead of making household repairs? Have you let the re-caulking go because you just bought a new vase?

What about the organizations you support? Do you donate your time and money to keep it afloat – or think others will do it and let things go?

In the past Americans were known for their volunteerism. Today, we expect the other guy or the government to do it. What happened to us? Why are we entitled without giving back?

JFK said, "Ask not what your country can do for you – ask what you can do for your country."

NARRATOR INTERFERENCE

*"If she told him once, she told him a thousand times."
Humpty Dumpty, don't climb on that wall.*

Doesn't that idea apply to our willingness to support fixing our infrastructure? Doesn't that idea apply to volunteering on committees and boards?

One of my favorite quotes:

*Those Americans are the most peculiar people in the world.
You'll not believe it when I tell you how they behave.
In a local community in their country a citizen may conceive of some need which is not being met. What does he do?
He goes across the street and discusses it with his neighbor.
Then what happens?*

A committee comes into being and then the committee begins to function on behalf of the need. You won't believe this, but it's true; all of this is done on behalf of the need.

You won't believe this, but it's true; all of this is done without reference to any bureaucrat.

All of this is done by private citizens on their own initiative!

Americans of all ages, conditions, and all dispositions consistently form associations to give entertainment, to found seminaries, to build inns, to construct churches, to diffuse books, to send out missionaries.

The health of a democratic society may be measured by the quality of function performed by private citizens.

– Alex deTocqueville

So, I ask, "What happened to our can do – will do – want to do spirit? What happened to our prioritizing those things that are more important to us? Why don't we fix the infrastructure, build dams and reservoirs – and support our associations by volunteering to be on committees?

I greatly fear the answers are "Let the government do it" and "Let the other guy do it." – WT

Albatross Selfie

The Last Selfie

Until I took one too many steps backward, closer to the edge of the Hoover Dam bypass,
it had been a good life.

What an odd moment to recall an albatross being the oldest bird, that is, per a scientist stationed on the Midway Atoll.

And the last movie that made me cry,
For the Love of the Game, when Billy Chapel pitched a perfect game, then retired his arm from the boys of summer.

Oh my, I'm still falling—against the wind—guess it's going to be another one of those days.

I wonder how old that albatross is?
They didn't say.

(Wisdom is a 63-year-old Laysan albatross believed to be the oldest wild bird in the world.
Her latest chick hatched at the Midway Atoll National Wildlife Refuge near Hawaii. Experts believe the bird could have raised as many as 35 chicks in her life.)

Immigrants Come

immigrants come
gain citizenship their stream continues to run fresh and bubbling adding daring colors to our steaming stew

immigrants come
we encourage them to live with us, enliven us to use, to nurture, to improve our country even if our home is not and will never be completely home to them

immigrants come
they appreciate the things America has managed to do well even if their own ways remain deep inside and their savory spices waft in the air around them

immigrants come
I know one of them
she likes central heating, good roads, police diligence, people helping her when she's lost lack of corruption, rule by fair and reasonable laws sure, America is not of one mind, never has been but we are a good people of generous hearts our laws and behavior welcome them and in their restaurants we taste their curious food

immigrants come
they come to our land
the land of opportunity where jobs can be found and scarcity is scarce

immigrants come and twenty years later the immigrants' children work and play make money, spend money, have kids they worry like we sometimes worry when out their windows they look and see

immigrants come

Blossoms and Mustard

Blossoms and Mustard

Driving that day I almost passed by the yellow and white and the ominous
grey sky
The clouds objected to Spring and still had a last Winter punch inside
The white blossoms on the trees
the yellow mustard
carpeting the ground
I stopped grabbed my camera got out of my car and walked in a ways
I stepped softly somehow not wanting to make a sound
I put the lens to my eye Shot one, shot two, shot more than I knew Moved back to view the scene Took one last photo then had to go
It would be weeks or so before I'd know what I had captured

Blossoms and mustard
in the field and thunder clouds grey and ominous ready to pour out the contained water for the thirsty trees Back in the car those clouds let loose
Again I delayed – Watching the blossoms lift up – I thought – they know
they can drink now
And the mustard
all those little yellow flowers below also perked up as if they knew they too could now sup Happily I drove away that day
And the best of those photos hangs in my home today
– Karen Hartley

Class Time ... Or Not

The time has come to saunter off to class to learn of sonnets, lyric voice, and style
But I could stay and visit with my lass, since midterms won't be here for quite awhile
But what of Pico, Sidney, More, and Donne?
My mind should thirst to know their wit and ways
Yet, in my mind, there's really only one whose beauty sets my loving heart ablaze
Should knowledge, more than lust, my passions heed?
Or is this time I truly can afford to visit with the one I love and need,
the one who, for a year now, I've adored?
Although it's not the way that things should be,
more happiness my loved one gives to me
– Kevin Carroll

Poor Phone is dead

Poor Phone is dead
Poor Phone fried and dead
All gather round its casing now and cry
It had an Intel heart
Back when it was so smart
Oh why did such an iPhone have to die?
Poor Phone is dead
Poor Phone fried and dead
It's lookin' oh so shutdown and serene
It's all laid out to rest
With its earphones on its chest
Its data files have never been so clean

May You-Noise

May I this, May I that ...
May in all vocabularies
Attempts to hide, to cover varies
Of desire for something, or sometimes, to scat
With something of yours?
Or much better,
Suggestions polite to the letter
While reading your publishing scores!

Tweets and Tips

by Michael Lunsford

Want an online break from your writing that still feels productive? Check out these suggestions.

1. Twitter WIP Tweets: If you're on Twitter, tweet excerpts from your completed work or Work in Process any day of the week using these hashtags: #MuseMon; #2bitTues; #1LineWed; #Thurds or #ThruLineThurs or #3WordThurs; #FP or #FictFri or #SciFiFri; #SlapDashSat; #SunWIP

Most have an optional weekly theme, typically announced the night before. (To find the theme for #MuseMon, do a Twitter search for "#MuseMon Theme" Sunday night.) Some, like #SlapDashSat, are open-ended: no weekly theme.

It's fun to see how many "likes" you can get and it helps to build your Twitter Followers list. This is also a great morale booster, as it reminds you how many gems you've written, but forgotten.

2. Follow South Bay Writers on Twitter: The club's username is @SouthBayWriters.

3. Twitter Pitch Contests: Tweet 140-character pitches to be viewed by agents and editors. If an agent or editor "likes" your pitch, that's an invitation to submit to them directly—one way to get past the slush pile.

4. April deadline: 4/25: #DVPit – Children's/Teen/ Adult Fiction/Nonfiction pitches about or by marginalized voices. Pitch your manuscript using #DVPit between 8am and 8pm EST.

5. Upcoming deadlines:

5/15: QueryKombat - Tournament competition where 64 query letters and first pages are matched against each other until only one is left. Agents request from the entries.

6/8: #Pitmad – Open to all genres. Pitch your manuscript using the #Pitmad hashtag between 8am & 8pm EDT. Only pitch 3 times per project.

6/22: #PBPitch – Open to picture books. Pitch your manuscript using the #PBPitch hashtag between 8am and 8pm EST.

6/28: #FaithPitch – Open to inspirational, faith-based, biblical worldview or Christian works, Picture Book through Adult categories. Pitch with #FaithPitch 8am to 8pm CST. —WR

Yahoo and gmail Hackers

Staff

"Yahoo and gmail Hackers," The Mercury News, March 16, 2017, within a first page article "Hackers Indicted," had an important sidebar, "How to Protect Your Data."

Cyber-security expert Adam Levin, founder of data-protection firm Cyber Scout, offered these tips for keeping data safe:

- Use long, strong passwords that are unique to each site. Never replicate your user IDs or passwords. Consider using a password manager.
- Enable two-factor authentication whenever and wherever possible.
- Don't click on links in email or social media. You may be downloading malicious software onto your device.
- Never trust someone who contacts you by email, phone, or text asking for sensitive personal or financial information and claims to be a representation of a government agency or trusted commercial institution. Always verify. Hang up the phone. Delete the email or text.
- If your emails have contained any credit card or bank account information, check your credit and bank accounts or sign up for ongoing, transactional monitoring.

Here's wishing you safe and happy web surfing. —WT
